I tried my hands at making my own version of a modular terrain set that could be used to flesh out a ruined landscape.

This set was initially designed for compatibility with Games Workshop's WarCry. However, I wanted to minimize wasted material on supports so I decided to make the walls modular.

In an effort to further reduce the overall time and support material I decided that all the major height pieces would be cut in half as to lay flat on the printer bed.

This is the result, I hope you enjoy it!

The files contained in this thing are the bare necessity to start making ruined building sections for use in skirmish games. You could make lots of different shapes and battlefields just with these free files.

However, if you are looking for more variety in wall sections or clear instructions on how many parts to print and how to assemble them to match the GW-provided ruin sets you can hop over to gumroad and buy the additional files shown in the ~5th image.

A note on the sample photos, the keen-eyed of you may notice that the pillars and bell tower are slightly different. These photos were taken with the prototype set, I altered the designs of the pillars and bell tower for better aesthetics.

Additionally, you may notice the stone head is not included in my files, that is because it is not my design. It comes from 3DHexes and is apart of their variety pack of ruined statue heads. Checking out their thing and their product is well worth it!

Free head as seen in my photos:
